THE TAMMANY FRAUDS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—There is good reason to believe that a large number of the most influential men in the community have agreed to call a public meeting, and to resist the payment of any further taxation until the present rulers of the city have been forced to render an account of their stewardship. Over 1,000 names, including those of many eminent merchants and bankers, have already been collected. It is stated that the meeting will certainly be held, and that it will be a large and earnest demonstration, for the purpose of devising some way by which the public may be relieved, and to forget the present administration ever came into power.

The Times says of the ring: "Not a fifteenth part of its misdeeds has yet been exposed, and it does not appear as if the whole truth ever will be. So they are at last universally; but they know that the end is near, and they are making preparations during the few days left them which will favor the light of day. There are not one thousand dollars in the treasury belonging to the city, and yet Sheriff Brennan has been asking other banks for the following: "If legal proceedings are taken against the Tammany ring, will you be willing to go on my bond?" The Irish Catholics have not manifested any sympathy with the corruption, and now are manifesting a disposition to break away from the party which has so long dealt them out such abuse. They know now that if the public fury is aroused they have nothing before them but ruin.

THE VIOLENT COURSE OF THE IRISH CATHOLICS have in injuring the Democracy greatly, and creating a strong sentiment against them, is shown by the following from the Times: "It is stated that the Tammany chiefs have outlined the course of the Irish Democracy for the winter and told them they must step thereupon now with timing and nicking if they wish their party to retain its power. If they do not, they will be overwhelmed by a respectable Yankee vote and politically discharged, their influence and power destroyed. We are both friendly to and sympathetic with the Irish people, but it is time for us to show our detestation of their conduct. When we elected John T. Hoffman (himself an Irishman) to be a Governor, we did not do it that he might say, 'What has he done for us?' Not so!") We are called over by Hugh Smith, and others of that ilk, by as long a list as any Hogan or Flanagan of them all, to endorse or vote for the nomination for President at the next election, we will wipe out all existence from the face of the earth. In the name of the Irish people, we protest against such a course. We have been solicited to join the Democratic clubs, and we have done so, but they can do nothing of importance until general activity is aroused. The dealings throughout the day exhibited a little firmer tone, and a decrease of ¼@¾ per cent was established. The advance was most marked in New York Central and Northwestern preferred.

THE CURRENT BOND MARKET was quiet and firm at the close. There was a further advance, being of the 7-30s, which was caused by some purchases of cover short contracts. There was also a very active demand for the 6s of 1881, and for the Central Pacific 6s. The closing quotations for Pacific Railroad bonds were as follows: Central Pacific, 1st, 6s, 1895, 110 bid; Pacific gold bonds, 107½ to 107¾; land grants, 91¾ to 91¾; income bonds, 82¾ to 83; stock, 66¾ to 66¾.

THE MONEY MARKET was without change, and abundant, the rates being as call 3 to 7 per cent, and prime discounts from 5 to 7 per cent.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

is steadily depressed by the sale of borrowed bills, and the closing rates were 109¾@109¾ for sixty bills at 110. These borrowed bills are obtained by the hypothecation of stocks and other securities. The following are the rates for gold to-day: Buying, 10¼; sell, 10¼; carrying, 6 per cent; flat, 5 per cent.

THE GOLD MARKET

was dull and steady throughout the day, with all the business at 112 to 112¼. The rates paid for carrying were 1-64, 1-6, 1-64@1 per cent. The following were the quotations were 112 to 112¼ at the close. The policy of the gold pool seems to be to keep the leading gold sold down by accepting the price.

THE DAY GOOD TRADE

is at last commencing. Southern and Western buyers are in the market, mailing their purchases, although only to a moderate extent. Prices are steady, and the demand for all staples is the most in demand. The jobbers are making a full display of dress goods and silk goods, which continue fashionable for the coming week.

Board of Arbitration Chosen.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MADISON, Wis., July 29.—The Grand Trunk Railroad Arbitration Board met to-day, and after a discussion on the value of the property of the road, decided to appoint Mr. Ellis, of Milwaukee, for the Fox River, and to offer one gentleman each for the Green Bay and Lake Shore and Western roads. The gentlemen named are Mr. Ellis, Mr. Fox, and Mr. Hall, of Milwaukee. The latter declined to serve, and Mr. Ellis was requested to name another. The Board will meet again on Monday next, when it is expected the matter will be settled. The Board has been in session three days, and has made very little progress. The Grand Trunk people have been willing to sell at $40 per mile, but the Board has refused to pay more than $30 per mile. The Board will probably remain in session a week longer.

MEASUREMENT OF TONNAGE.

Several meetings of representatives of transportation having occurred in the city of late, the subject of the Board of Health, have taken place between the Secretary of the Treasury and a committee appointed by a general meeting of the parties interested, held in New York, for the purpose of considering the question of measurement of tonnage. The committee have been examined by a committee appointed for the purpose, and discussed considerably. They have been directed to confer on five years of experience in the District on matters from other districts.

THE MILE-PITCHER RE-MILA AFFAIR.

The Colorado (S. C.) Press, just received, has an account of the mule-pitching Ku-Klux assaulting Messrs. Simpson and Wade, a few days since. The details correspond with those already reported, except that it mentions the only broken arm received by Simpson, and that Trowbridge, the Commissioner, was present. The Press says Mr. Trowbridge arrived at Abbeville on the 20th, and immediately proceeded to the scene of the outrage, where he remained a day or two, and then returned to Abbeville, where he remained a day or two, and then returned to Abbeville, where he remained a day or two, and then returned to Abbeville

THE LABOR QUESTION.

The President of the National Labor Union has issued a call for the fifth annual convention of the union, to be held in St. Louis, on the 7th of August next. The same organization has called a political convention, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, on the third Wednesday in October, to nominate candidates for President and Vice President of the United States. The division of the body into two conventions, one exclusively political, will probably leave the St. Louis convention at liberty to consider questions purely pertaining to labor. Whether to the two subject have been so closely mixed as to result in a threatened dissolution of the organization. The attempt to force the great body of workingmen, represented in the union, into a distinct political party, to be arrayed against all other workingmen, was, for a long time, successfully resisted. Now, under the lead of a number of persons having special fortunes for the cure of national evils, the organization has been induced to attempt the part of a political party. The result is a most incongruous combination of the rudest theories, which have been put forth as the "basis" for political action, and to adopt which one or both of the political parties of the country must consent, or be defeated. As specimens of this "basis" we make the following extracts:

"The present system favors the distribution of property; hence, the poverty and misery of the producing classes, and the wealth and luxury of the non-producing classes."

"A gold basis is a fallacy, invented by speculators, bankers, and paper currency contractors into which, locating a mine of treasure, but use the annual product of the mines, and the balance of trade, to regulate the volume of paper currency, fluctuate into a gold basis or

BASE BALL.

WHITE STOCKINGS VS. MUTUALS.

If there was ever a day when Chicago had had fill of base ball glory, that day was yesterday, when the return game took place between the White Stockings and the New York Mutuals, being the second game of the series for the championship of the United States. Everybody who was prepared to see York on the 5th of June, on which occasion the Whites, although completely outclassing their opponents, gave the game away by needlessly giving their men chances to score, feel for 1871 by the score of 8 to 5. They were promised another game, and a few days later, when they failed to play, but their wanton exhibition of a slight rain shower gave the Mutuals a pretext for withdrawing just after play was begun, although the weather cleared up within five minutes after the Mutes had left the field. The game was evidently only too well pleased to get out of it as, for they seemed to shave in the precalculant of the Chicagos that they were sure to be beaten, and almost confidence, feeling that they would win beyond question. An effort was made to insure the postponed game on the following day, on the ground that the management would have to do it, and as the Whites were compelled to remain in town without the much-coveted opportunity to redeem themselves, they looked upon the game as a godsend, with eager interest, to the day when the Mutuals should make their appearance in Chicago for the beating of the club was deeply considered by the Eastern men, and by the Chicagos. They believed they could do it, and they only awaited the game to make good their pretensions to superiority.

THE AFTERNOON.

This feeling was exactly that of the lovers of the national game in Chicago, and the desire for revenge was in the ascendant yesterday with far more numerous additions of adherents to the cause than played here the late season. Contributions had arrived to go and see the White Stocking Mutual meeting, and the result was that the attendance was large, people throughout the entire West had caught the fever, and had made up their minds to be present on the 5th of July. The various railway companies brought in excursion trains, and in the early morning and in the forenoon they came pouring in for this purpose alone. Long before last 2 o'clock, the hour for opening the game, long lines of people stood in waiting for the gates to be opened, and the rush for a chance to gain admission, in an incredibly short time after the doors were opened, was great. Long rows were closely packed, with men and boys within the western fort, which was to have been occupied by the ladies, but even before that time, completely bedecked with female apparel, and there, at the north end were filled, the game at the extreme end of the field, where seats for from 2,000 to 3,000 people had been erected. The special reporters, in the grandstand, were then filled to overflowing, and the crowd, which had commenced in the southeast corner, where there was a slight elevation, and which was soon filled, also commenced to overflow, and, although such a step was not allowed, perhaps 2,000 people stood along the line of the field, and in the left field. Along beautifully, the grand stand was densely packed with ladies, and the scene presented was one of the most pert ladies among whom the Mutuals were promptly represented. Neither were they represented. Neither were they represented. Neither were they

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE POWER OF VALENTINE.

Upon leaving the coffee party of Mrs. Flick, Grace Stuart, still smarting under the pain inflicted by the women there assembled, proceeded at once to call upon her dear friend Valentine, who had so unjustly been dealt with in her presence. The two young girls held a long and confidential conversation, after which Valentine seemed full of tears and appeared greatly discouraged. Grace evening in tears, her face pale with the exception of a deep spot of carmine upon either cheek, showed that she had been deeply moved.

Valentine blushed, but, nevertheless, closed the piano, and slowly left the room without a word.

Count Benoni was astonished, but attributing this singular conduct to a whim arising, perhaps, from the nervous state natural to one who, on the next day, expected to make or mar her future, he followed her into the library, where she was already composing herself on a sofa. But here he seemed to meet with no better reception, for, upon his approach, she made a motion as if to put aside the portion of a bird-cage.

"Just such as you are," said Harper, with great gallantry.

"That all may be very well," said Dr. Stuart, "but my advice is, that our nightingale should have a good dinner, for the evening's work will need strength."

"That's her wisest course," said the Count, "as my passing her a plate of excellent soup. "Nothing affects the stomach so much as strong emotion, and it is no small task to be called upon to sing before the Emperor of Germany, and retire from his presence.

"Keep your seat, child," said the Count, kindly, although more touched than pleased at the loss of her young son; had not noticed more than her father the suffering which Valentine had undergone in the preceding half hour. The Count alone detected something, and he viewed it to be disease, for he had no reason to suppose that Valentine's heart could be interested in anything but music and her family's welfare, to be guessed from the question of her, in order not to cause unnecessary anxiety on her own account, to divert the subject from Valentine's debut.

Two days after that Valentine's manner toward him, although reserved, was not icy, as it had been, and the arrangements in the event of all the details of the dear girl's appearance.

Several days had passed, and the cold season was approaching its end, when an opera season was advertised in Chicago. It was to be a short one, and the Count had visited to the old musician that the occasion was favorable for the first appearance of Valentine. Mr. Duval, happy and impatient as a child, had given his hearty consent, and the Count was to be present at the Chicago Opera House.

The Huguenots."

"After this attempt," said he, "we will send for Italy, where our prima donna does not finish her studies. In the interim, an engagement will be made with the manager to secure her to the stage, and in the eyes of the public, may be entered into. At least, all that will have acquired the necessary grace and is fully inaugurated into the secrets of her profession, we will take her to Europe, to establish her reputation. Send the family chat of the Count with old Mr. Duval, and the idea of returning to Europe with Valentine, he at last to allow of his giving the local objection to any honest proposal which carried with it the least appearance of success, now, Valentine, was to be the star of the season. The elite of Chicago had purchased in good season and the house was crowded. The Count, the indefatigable Mr. Harper, Benedict, and the venerable Dr. Stuart, had made it a point of honor to interest everybody who at all cared for such things in this first appearance of the young Austrian singer. Every prejudice was removed, and Valentine had to be strong and success was hers.

It was not all elegant that Chicago could find somewhere in the debut of the first time stage it had as yet produced.

Simple and beautiful was the old artist in his innocent anticipation of pleasure. The Count was in a state of excitement with that of his own dead child, and seemed to forget his fears or sorrow. He had passed before the public, all moved him to the very depth of his heart. It repeated to him the story of his own life, and when he had, when first he saw in the present; that he beheld, brilliant and radiant, full of health and beauty, that child of his own, who had, when first he saw her, all that renders woman lovely and fascinating, the idol of man, while he fortunate enough to have gained her love. Alas! when at the first moment of the curtain's rising, he was in a state of excitement which was extreme, and when Valentine appeared on the stage, he was overcome with joy and pride, and when she began to sing, he was in a state of ecstasy, and when she had finished, he had been lost in admiration.

The old musician modestly, but with the enthusiasm of genius, rendered her part, the Count and Harper, who had acquired the art of applause, and in fully inaugurated into the secrets of her profession, we will take her to Europe, to establish her reputation. Send the family chat of the Count with old Mr. Duval, and the idea of returning to Europe with Valentine, he at last to allow of his giving the local objection to any honest proposal which carried with
